ABSTRACT

This study describes and assesses the state of bilingual curriculum development activities in the National Network of Centers for Bilingual Education. Recommendations are made for improvement in the creation, production, and distribution of bilingual instructional materials. The overall approach to the study was tripartite and focused on: (1) the development of an inventory of bilingual instructional materials including, a variety of European, Native American (and Alaskan), and Asian languages; (2) site visits to Centers, commercial publishers, and distributors to analyze their procedures for the development and distribution of materials; and (3) a mail survey of Local Education Agencies, equally divided between those in the Title VII program and those with other sources of funding, on their needs for, and uses of, bilingual education materials. This volume of the study presents the inventory of the U.S. developed bilingual instructional materials and is concerned with: the compilation of a list of available materials and those currently under development; the identification of gaps in the inventory of materials; and the analysis of the likely market for materials represented by the gaps. The work reported herein was performed pursuant to a contract with the United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Office of Education. The statement, findings, conclusions, recommendations and other data in this report are solely those of the Contractor and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Office of Education.

This report is one of several made pursuant to Contract No. HEW 300-76-0358. The amount charged to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for the work resulting in this report (inclusive of the amounts so charged for any prior reports submitted under this contract) is approximately $309,277. The names of the persons employed or retained by Development Associates with managerial or professional responsibility for this project and this report are listed below:

Mr. Peter B. Davis, Officer-in-Charge

Mr. Wilbur A. Knerr, Project Director

Dr. Norma Z. Chaplain, Senior Research Specialist

Dr. Malcolm Young, Senior Technical Advisor and Editor

Dr. Milton Goldsamt, Senior Research Advisor and Analyst

Ms. N. Elizabeth Arnow, Bilingual Curriculum Specialist

Mr. Adolfo Munoz, Field Survey Specialist

Mr. Tomas Torres, Field Survey Specialist

Ms. Jean Rogers, Editor

Mr. Warren N. Chapman, Editor

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The acquisition of the data required for this report would not have been possible without the sincere cooperation Development Associates, Inc. (DA), received from many persons at every step of the way. From the public sector, invaluable assistance was provided by the management and personnel of the Office of Bilingual Education. Recognition should be given to the directors and staffs of the Title VII and Lau Centers who not only welcomed DA warmly, but spoke openly and candidly about their work. Special appreciation also should be given to the personnel of the many LEA's who, despite their heavy workload, took the time to answer DA's questionnaire with care and provided useful data and impressions. In the private sector, the publishers and distributors DA visited were equally kind in providing their time as well as comprehensive information about textbook publishing.

Finally, DA acknowledges the invaluable assistance provided by Mr. Tetsuo Okada, the Project Officer, who over the two years of the study made possible its smooth operation and provided encouragement and assistance whenever it was needed.

DEFINITIONS AND ACRONYMS

Definitions of key terminology used throughout the report volumes are provided below.

Bilingual Education Program

A program of instruction designed for children of limited English speaking ability to elementary and secondary schools. Within the program are the instruction and study of English and, when necessary to allow the child to progress through the educational system, the native language of the children is also included. In addition, instruction is interrelated with the cultural heritage of the students. Within the elementary school, bilingual education instruction is part of all courses of subjects in order to allow a child to progress effectively through the educational system.

Market (a geographical area of demand)

From the point of view of a Center or publisher, the potential group of U.S. students (and their teachers) enrolled in elementary, secondary, or higher education institutions that want, and are disposed to purchase instructional materials. Further market segmentation is made on the basis of users' characteristics and identification of relevant decision-makers for organizational units in the target market segments.

Market Research

The gathering of relevant information as to consumer preferences for goods and services.

Need

From the Network's standpoint, need seems to be a qualitative, not always quantitative, expression of interest by bilingual educators in a produce of service. A lack of something requisite, desirable, or useful . . . a condition requiring supply or relief.

Marketable

Fit to be offered for sale in a market . . . wanted by purchasers . . . salable.

Marketability

The quality or state of being marketable.

Market Value

The price at which both buyers and sellers are willing to do business.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

The Bilingual Education Program is a discretionary grant program under Public Law 90-247 of January 2, 1968 whose purpose was to provide financial assistance to local agencies to develop and carry out innovative elementary and secondary school programs designed to meet the special needs of children with limited English language skills.

The intent of the legislation was reinforced by Interim Rules and Regulations for the Title VII Program published in the Federal Register on April 8, 1976. These 1976 regulations fully implemented the bilingual provisions of the Education Amendments of 1974 (P.L. 93-380). Under the rules, financial assistance was provided for:

- Training Resource Centers in designated geographic areas which serve personnel participating in bilingual programs in local school districts or in training programs at institutions of higher learning;
- Materials Development Centers for the development of multilingual instructional materials to be used in programs for bilingual children and bilingual educators; and
- Dissemination and Assessment Centers for the evaluation, publication, and distribution of such materials.

Establishment of these Centers was intended to be directly responsive to formal evaluations conducted at the Office of Education which consistently pointed to two areas where there were critical shortages of the resources needed to implement effective bilingual programs. The first shortage pertained to adequately trained teachers for bilingual education; the second perceived shortage referred to appropriate curricular materials for those programs.

To assess the progress being made on bilingual education materials by the federally supported National Network of Centers for Bilingual Education and others, the Office of Planning, Budgeting, and Evaluation, Office of Education, HEW contracted with Development Associates, Inc., in July 1976, for a Study of the State of Bilingual Materials Development and the Transition of Materials to the Classroom. The purpose of the study was to describe and assess the state of bilingual curriculum development activities and to make recommendations for improvements in the system of production and distribution of bilingual materials. These recommendations were to be in the form of a model management plan specifying actions that might be implemented by the USOE.

The study consisted of three interrelated parts. First, site visits to Title VII Bilingual Education Centers were conducted to investigate the activities of the federally funded Network in the development, testing, publicizing, and distribution of materials and the training of teachers. Second, a mail survey of school districts was made to assess the existing needs for materials and the functioning of the Network from an LEA perspective. Third, an inventory was made of bilingual instructional materials developed in the U.S. for use in elementary and secondary classes.

The three parts of the study reinforce each other and together they provide the data base for the development of the Model Management Plan that summarizes the present state of bilingual education materials, discusses priorities of needs for materials, and makes recommendations for improving the development and dissemination system.

The study is presented in three separate reports. One contains the assessment of the Centers and the Model Management Plan. The second study report summarizes the results of the survey of local school districts. This, the third study report, presents the Inventory of the U.S. developed bilingual instructional materials and is concerned with:

- the compilation of a list of available materials and additional materials currently under development;
- the identification of gaps in the Inventory of materials; and
- the analysis of the likely market for materials represented by the gaps.

The following section deals with the methodology used in: compiling the Inventory, identifying gaps in the Inventory, and analyzing the market for the kinds of materials represented by both the gaps and the needs for materials expressed by LEA's in the mail survey of school districts. Subsequent chapters then present the information collected.

METHODOLOGY

METHODOLOGY USED FOR THE INVENTORY OF BILINGUAL INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS

The Inventory encompassed two main objectives. The first was that of a unit product count -- the quantity of individual instructional materials uncovered for each subject and grade within a specific language. The second was concerned with needs as reflected by the findings of the Inventory (i.e., detecting a gap if none or few entries were found within a particular language - subject - grade combination). To these findings were added the needs as expressed by LEA's in the LEA survey. The combination of both sources of expressed needs were used in estimating the overall potential market.

Criteria Used for Selection of Materials Titles

A series of criteria were used to focus the Inventory on the most relevant materials and those which could be feasibly gathered. Thus, one key decision was to confine efforts exclusively to bilingual instructional materials published or produced in the U.S., its territories, or possessions. This excluded Spanish, Romance language, and ESL materials which were published or produced overseas, as well as materials whose country of origin was unknown.

As another criterion, only entries employing the Roman alphabet were used. It was evident from the outset that the characteristics and idiosyncracies of each language would have direct bearing on the Inventory process. French, Italian, Portuguese, and Spanish use the Roman alphabet and offered no entry or computerization difficulties. But non-Roman languages, based on other alphabets (Arabic, Greek, Russian) and particularly the ideograph languages of East Asia (Chinese, Japanese, Korean) did present a problem. Provided the title, author, publisher, and other data were in some way linked to the English language -- by translation or transliteration -- an Inventory entry was possible to create. Otherwise, it would have been necessary to arrange for translation, which would have entailed time and costs not envisioned for the project.

On a related point, the initial intention was to include in the Inventory only those materials copyrighted or developed after 1969, to coincide with the first year of the Title VII program. This proved impracticable because very few of the "secondary" sources indicated copyright dates. Further, it was determined to include only those materials which were commercially or institutionally developed, so as to exclude the large numbers of materials developed by individual teachers for local classroom use.

Having first decided on these broad Inventory entry inclusion criteria, more specific criteria for selection of individual materials then were needed. Thus the RFP definition of materials as "special instructional materials for children of limited English-speaking ability," was refined further. Because of the differences in availability of materials in the various languages, and the resulting differences in what is used in the classroom for instructional purposes, more specific inclusion criteria were established for each language.

For purposes of the Inventory, the 12 languages which were included in the study fell into three categories. These categories of languages and their entry inclusion criteria are discussed below.

a. Romance Languages

French, Italian, Portuguese, and Spanish were the Romance languages included in the Inventory. The definition chosen for use with curriculum materials in these languages was -- those materials that were developed with explicit or implied instructional outcomes (goals and objectives). In this regard, the basic guideline in the EPIE report was used. It stated:

> "They can be clearly stated or they can be understood with differing degrees of clarity. Often it is possible to infer goals and objectives from provisions made in the instructional design, such as scope and sequence, methodology or evaluation."*

(These goals can focus on either a process or a product and must relate to cognitive, affective, or psychomotor skills.)

b. Non-Romance Languages

The languages in the Inventory from this group were: Russian, Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Pilipino, Vietnamese, and Native American and Alaskan. The definition applied to these languages was -- those materials which can be used in the classroom for instructional goals and objectives. This definition is, by intent, wider in scope than that used for Romance languages. It includes a broad category of materials such as newspapers, coloring books, storybooks, etc., which may not have been produced with explicit or implied instructional objectives, yet which are often used for teaching purposes.

c. English as a Second Language (ESL)

Because ESL is an integral part of bilingual education, it seemed within the intent and objectives of the Inventory to include ESL materials. Accordingly, ESL was added to the language categories. Later in the study, however, a recurring problem evolved with ESL entries. Many publishers and distributors place conventional English language arts (reading series, spellers, literature) and remedial materials under an ESL classification in their catalogs. Because of this fact, it became necessary to remove these conventional language arts materials from the Inventory in the final screenings of potential entries.

Therefore, based on the above considerations, the final inclusion criteria for the Inventory consisted of the following:

- U.S. market materials published in the National Network of Bilingual Centers or developed by commercial sources;
- information which was already available in the Roman alphabet (i.e., in a Romance language or in English through translation or transliteration);
- information on each of the major Inventory entry descriptors (see page 7);
- curriculum materials (using the appropriate definition for each language) which were in one of the twelve language groups. This also included accompanying materials such as teachers' guides, workbooks, etc.;
- curriculum materials in two or more languages, one of which was from the twelve groups; and
- professional materials designed to assist teachers in structuring learning situations for pre-K and K; these included items such as teacher's manuals and curriculum guides for pre-K and K, since at these levels curriculum materials are generally meant for teacher use.

Sources of Inventory Entries

Secondary sources rather than the original publication or item were used for compiling entries for inclusion in the Inventory. These secondary (or even tertiary) sources represented bibliographies, catalogs such as those of distributors', book lists (comprehensive, general, or specialized), and periodicals devoted exclusively to instructional materials. Typical types of sources therefore included:

- Annotated Bilingual Bicultural Bibliographies - the CARTEL series from the Dissemination and Assessment Center for Bilingual Education; El Paso Public Schools listings for library resource centers
- Materials Selection Aids - the EPIE Institute reports for Spanish language arts, Spanish "branch" programs, and Asian programs
- Materials Catalogs - the BABEL Media Center, National Assessment and Dissemination Center, and the publishing houses of Santillana, Regents, and National Textbook.
- Bibliographies - Indochinese Refugee Education Guides from the National Indochinese Clearinghouse, Center for Applied Linguistics; Title VII French Project-developed materials from the National Materials Development Center; Navajo, and other Native American materials from the Southwest Bilingual Education Training Resource Center

It should be recognized by the Inventory users that this level of source necessarily brings with it certain shortcomings. The approach was recommended by the RFP, perhaps because it was cost-efficient (rather than having to incur excessive costs of materials purchases, or travel to numerous libraries). The approach also minimized time factors, which introduce an element of outdatedness in the entries. However, the sources used were listed in the secondary sources because of their own underlying commercial and institutional purposes, which were not always the fairly exhaustive, multilingual, and curriculum-specific ones of the Inventory. As a result, not only were entry deficiencies present, but at times no information was available on such basic descriptors as subject and grade level.* In effect, therefore, almost all of the bibliographic work depended on the accuracy and reliability of third persons. A further complication concerned materials contained in the catalogs of distributors; few such materials indicated the origin of their listings. Furthermore, many distributors carried the same publications, thus requiring constant checks to avoid the repetition of entries.

*These two characteristics, together with languages and type of material (e.g., text, workbook, etc.) formed the four basic descriptors; during the course of compiling the Inventory, over 700 potential Inventory entries lacked one or more of the four descriptors and thus were excluded.

The relative merits of using secondary sources were discussed at length early in the study onset. The decision to use such sources, an approach which was central to the Inventory concept, therefore meant that as a reality, only the major material contained in that source could be recorded; gaps in the four key descriptors (language, subject, grade or grade range, type of material) could not be readily retrieved.

Information Recorded for Each Inventory Entry

A 3 x 5 bibliographic entry card was prepared for each entry which met the above-stated inclusion criteria (e.g., commercial availability, etc.). Each entry card bore the following 16 types of information, using definitions for recording information supplied to trained DA personnel:

- Title - the name of the printed or non-printed material.
- Series Affiliation and Components - the name of the series to which the material belonged plus a listing of the accompanying items to be used in the same grade level -- workbook, solution book, key, teacher's guide, etc.
- Author or Developer - the person, collective persons, institution, or other entity that developed the material or caused it to be developed, and assumed responsibility for it
- Publisher - The person or legal entity that coordinated all aspects of the intellectual, graphic, financial, and distributive processes of the material, causing it to become commercially or otherwise obtainable

Data Processing of Inventory Entries

The bibliographic entry cards which were prepared were periodically reviewed for omissions, inaccuracies and similar information recording flaws. All acceptable entry cards were assigned a four-digit identification number which together with assigned language, type of material, grade level, subject, and publisher codes were recorded onto another document which was more readily keypunched. The coding categories used for each descriptor are presented in Exhibit 1. Other keypunching stages dealt with the title of the Inventory entry (and its associated identification number), and the publisher's full name. In each of these three keypunching stages, 100 percent verification was used to maximize accuracy, although it was recognized that foreign language entries presented quite a challenge to keypunching personnel unacquainted with non-English combinations of letters, and usually high levels of accuracy would be difficult to attain.

The keypunched documents were stored on computer tapes and passed through a series of computerized editing runs to screen out entries with omissions, overseas publishers (where this could not be done at earlier stages of the entry preparation process), and other types of editing for resolving duplicate identification numbers, etc. The three types of information on each entry (title, descriptors, and publisher) were then merged and stored in a data record format which was sorted by language, subject, grade, type of material, and alphabetically within these four groupings, publisher, and title.

A series of computer programs were written in FORTRAN, JCL (Job Control Language), and SPSS (Statistical Package for the Social Sciences), and were run at HEW-based third-generation IBM computer facilities. These programs were used in the data editing, data record merge, and storage processes; a specially-written program was written for the final Inventory format, as were SPSS programs which prepared an overview or a "statistical profile" of the Inventory for market gap estimation purposes.

METHODOLOGY USED TO DETERMINE MATERIALS FOR DEVELOPMENT OR BEING DEVELOPED

Information on the materials which were considered to be either planned for development or which were actually underway were gathered from contacts with Materials Development Centers (MDC's). Other information was gathered through the sources reviewed during the Inventory entry cataloguing process. (One such was the "Projected Scope of Work Profile" of the National Multilingual Multicultural Materials Development Center in Pomona California.) Information on each of the planned materials was then reviewed to determine if the item met the same criteria as the Inventory, i.e., was intended for the domestic market, supplied sufficient information to determine its characteristics in terms of language, subject, grade, and type of material, etc. Having assembled the suitable materials from the MDC's, a statistical analysis was made of the characteristics of the planned materials, including a frequency distribution of the publishers or distributors initiating the development activity. The goal here was to determine if a pattern existed, i.e., whether or not the materials development activities underway or being planned were "shoring up" certain gaps in materials availability which might be present for particular language-subject-grade combinations. A listing (by source and title) also was prepared.

PROCEDURES USED FOR DETERMINING GAPS OR AREAS OF SHORTAGE IN AVAILABLE MATERIALS

Determining gaps or areas of shortage was approached in several ways, based on the Inventory effort and the listing of materials currently being developed or planned for development/distribution. An overview analysis or statistical profile was prepared of the pattern of entries in the Inventory, which presented frequency distributions and crosstabulations of the physical count of the titles recorded. (These statistics appear later in this volume as Exhibits 2 and 4). As absolute, physical counts, they simply provide the number of units registered; the suitability or quality of these units is beyond the scope of this study, although it can be indirectly inferred by LEA survey results (presented in the companion volume Evaluation of Bilingual Curriculum Development Activities) which contain ratings of types of materials as to availability, suitability, cultural relevancy, etc.

Thus the frequency distributions and crosstabulations, the latter primarily used as a three-way subject by grade analysis for each language, indicated the number of entries present for each combination of the three descriptors. Using the pattern of entries for Spanish as a guide (since it presented the largest single grouping or portion of the Inventory) a set of frequency of occurrence categories were developed and then were reviewed for other sets of language entries to determine its usability. Thus, the range of zero to nine entries in a particular language-subject-grade level combination represented an area of "severe shortage" since none or few materials were present, ten to forty-nine represented a "moderate shortage" since little variety or questionable utility might exist* and fifty or above was defined as representing a "no appreciable shortage" area, i.e., having a sufficient variety of materials. The "severe" and "moderate" shortage areas then were reviewed to determine if currently developed or planned materials development activities were meeting these detected needs.

METHODS USED IN ESTIMATING MARKET DEMAND

Estimating market demand was done in two ways: by determining the number of students in the total possible market, using published sources, and by using LEA survey Title VII respondent information on the stated language, subject, and grades needing materials, and the number of students in those groupings who could use the materials. The survey results were based on a 60 percent overall response rate from Title VII and non-Title VII projects; Title VII data which were considered more suitable to analyze for the market estimation task also contained a 26 percent nonresponse rate on the survey item dealing with the extent and type of materials needs. The LEA survey data approach represented the potential market, i.e., the bilingual student count at each grade level for each subject to be taught in a given language. (This should be distinguished from the term, marketability, which is more complex. It is not only concerned with the potential market, but with whether the item indicated as a need by both the Inventory rating and the LEA's can be produced, promoted, and sold profitably. Each publisher determines marketability from its own perspective in accordance with internal production and marketing policies). The former approach represents an outer limit on the number of potential users. Since many students in need of bilingual education are not in bilingual education programs, they do not represent a real market.

*In reality, this represented a skewed distribution, since there was likely to be closer to ten than to forty-nine entries in any combination of descriptors, also given the relatively few materials in non-Spanish or non-ESL areas.

This, of course, is strictly a quantitative approach. Although no specific data is available the study staff learned during its field work that little material was available as integrated series (e.g., K-third) of core textbook materials. Thus, the type of material available is a key factor which the study can only marginally address.

As a technical footnote, it should be added that a variety of statistical weighting approaches were reviewed and tentatively applied to determine if sound estimates of the Title VII universe of funded projects and their extent of materials needs could be obtained from projections of available survey data. The weighting approaches included adjustments for (a) survey nonresponse through linear inflation estimators, poststratification by using relevant background information such as the number of years the project was in operation and project size (defined as number of children served), and (b) item nonresponse. After some review, the magnitude of the "adjusted weights" still appeared to produce unrealistic projections of materials needs and thus were not used for market estimation purposes. In retrospect this may have been a wise decision, in view of the 60 percent mail survey response rate (although average for such surveys) and the fact that bilingual education projects are widely diverse; statistical adjustments, even those which are complex ones, may not be substitutes for actual information from the projects themselves about their ongoing needs.

Estimates of the total market were established by pooling information gathered from the following relevant statistical sources:

- Development Associates. A Study of State Programs in Bilingual Education.
- Waggoner, D. Geographic Distribution, Nativity, and Age Distribution of Language Minorities in the United States: Spring 1976 (Bulletin 78 B-5), National Center for Education Statistics, August 22, 1978.
- Waggoner, D. Place of Birth and Language Characteristics of Persons of Hispanic Origin in the United States, Spring 1976 (Bulletin 78 B-6), National Center for Education Statistics, October 20, 1978.
- Waggoner, D. State Education Agencies and Language -- Minority Students (NCES 78-239), National Center for Education Statistics, 1978.
- American Institutes for Research. Assessment Instruments for Limited English-speaking Students, October 1978. Under contract from the U.S. National Institute of Education.

Keeping in mind the scope of the methodologies used in preparing the Inventory, its accompanying materials shortage and market analysis estimates, and their necessary limitations, the following pages are devoted to an indepth discussion of the patterns of materials availability and needs which prevailed in the twelve language groups of interest.

FORMAT AND CONTENT OF THE INVENTORY OF BILINGUAL INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS

FORMAT

The final Inventory consists of 2,738 double-spaced entries which span 317 pages of computer-generated listings; a table of contents is included. A summary statistic, the number of entries, appears at the end of each set of entries for the primary classification factor, language. Each language begins on a new page of the Inventory. Within each language, the top of each numbered page indicates the headings of language, subject, grade level, material, publisher, and title. The sequence of entries exactly follows the description categories shown in Exhibit 1, except where no entries were found for a particular language-subject-grade material combination.

Each subject is separated by a dotted line for the sake of readability. Each entry occupies three lines, the first line listing the four prime descriptors, the second line the publisher, and the third line the title of the Inventory entry.

CONTENTS OF THE BILINGUAL INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS INVENTORY

The number of entries comprising the Bilingual Instructional Materials Inventory (U.S. produced) was 2,738, representing 20 different languages: European (5), Asian (5), Native American and Alaskan (9), and Middle East (1) languages, in addition to English as a Second Language. Of these languages, approximately half the materials were in Spanish and just over a third in English as a Second Language. Of the other 19 languages only Chinese, with 5 percent, and French, with over 1 percent, were represented in the Inventory to any extent. Exhibit 2 presents a more detailed breakdown.

The Inventory lists 1,217 sources for obtaining materials in the U.S. which include Title VII Centers, publishers, distributors, audio-visual producers, and local education agencies. However, this extensive list can be narrowed to a nucleus of approximately 200 consistent sales outlets for bilingual materials, equally divided between distributors and publishers. However, if a criterion of 1 percent or more of the materials included in the Inventory is used as a basis for citing sources, there are only 22 consistent sources of materials. These major sources are listed, in descending order of their contribution to the Inventory, in Exhibit 3. It is noteworthy that the 22 sources represent only 1.8 percent of all sources, yet account for almost half (44.2 percent) of all Inventory entries.

The instructional materials included in the Inventory also can be described according to the type of materials, subjects, and grades they cover. Exhibit 4 presents a statistical summary of these characteristics and indicates that English Language Arts and Language Arts (in a non-English language) were the subjects having the most bilingual instructional materials available. Furthermore, elementary school grade-level materials were more available than junior high or high school-level materials; in particular, materials for kindergarten through third grade were the most available. As might be expected, textbooks were the most prevalent type of material.

Other analyses were prepared of the combinations of languages, subjects and grades represented by Inventory entries, as initial insights into estimating materials shortages. Of the 2,738 entries the three largest groups of language-subject materials were: ESL-English Language (28.0%), Spanish-Language Arts in a non-English language (18.5%), and Spanish-Social Studies (4.7%). In addition, Chinese-Social Studies materials were largest among non-Spanish languages (represented by 2.5% of the total entries).

Turning to language-grade combinations, Spanish materials which were geared for kindergarten through third grade were most represented in the Inventory (18.8%). Except for other Spanish-grade combinations and those for ESL, most combinations represented less than 1 percent of all Inventory entries. An exception to this was Chinese-prekindergarten through third grade, which had 81 entries in this category (3.0%).

Finally, a three-way cross-tabulation of the subject-grade combinations for each of the 22 language groupings included in the Inventory confirmed earlier analyses; i.e., relatively few materials are available for other than the Spanish language. The number of entries ranged from: one for Choctaw, Language Arts in a non-English language, prekindergarten-third grades, and Upper Tanana for the same subject, ungraded, to 1323 for Spanish which had one or more entries in 76 of 80 cells formed by the 8 subject and 10 grade combinations used in this study. Carrying this approach further, Chinese, the language with the next largest number of entries, 139 (after the 964 of ESL, which itself reflects the gaps in materials availability) primarily had elementary school level materials which clustered in the Language Arts and Social Studies areas. That is, 107 of the 139 entries were at the elementary school grades; 85 of the 107 (79%) were in those subjects.

Exhibit 5 presents findings from preparing a "diversity index" for each language. The rank-ordering of the number of non-zero (no materials) cells in the 8 by 10 matrix indicates a median of 4 cells, i.e., major gaps in material availability for most of the listed languages. Only 2 of the 22 languages have more than half of these subject-grade combinations covered.

*Indicates that all subject and grade combinations have available materials.

Note: These statistics are based on breadth or diversity of coverage; thus, the concentration of materials such as 13 for Pilipino-Language Arts-Prekindergarten through third are not expressed here.

From these analyses of Inventory materials, it is apparent that few languages other than Spanish and ESL have sufficient grade or subject coverage for bilingual programs. Due to its length, the entire Inventory is presented in the last chapter of this volume.

CHARACTERISTICS OF MATERIALS NOW BEING DEVELOPED OR PLANNED FOR DEVELOPMENT

This chapter presents a description of the 193 instructional materials which were identified as either planned for development or as currently in production. Because the materials development process is not a static one, it was anticipated that most of these materials would be available in the near future and therefore they were included in the Inventory. In retrospect, obtaining usable listings of materials development activities from Title VII Centers proved to be difficult.

Although presented elsewhere in this final report, a list of MDC-DAC publishing programs and their emphases is presented as Exhibit 6 in this chapter. In essence, 14 MDC's in cooperation with 3 DAC's are engaged in 109 publishing programs involving 32 languages designed to serve the needs of bilingual children in grades K-12 covering the principal curriculum areas. These materials programs are in various stages of completion and either have been published in part or are scheduled for eventual publication by one of the three DAC's. When completed, 193 materials will be produced and available.

Ten sources were responsible for the 193 materials identified and only three of these sources accounted for 10 percent or more: the Dissemination and Assessment Center (51%), Northeast Center for Curriculum Development (16%), and the Bay Area Bilingual Education League, or BABEL (14%). Materials under development have the following characteristics: almost 39 percent are in Chinese, 22 percent in Spanish, 12 percent in Pilipino, 5 percent in Japanese, 2 percent in Korean, 1 percent in Vietnamese, and an additional 19 percent in various other languages. The materials being developed predominantly are texts (70%) followed by posters, games, and other manipulative activities (10%), and curriculum or teacher guides (9%). Social Studies (36%) and Language Arts (35%) are the subject areas in which materials are primarily being developed, distantly followed by mathematics (8%) and cultural materials (6%). The lower grades, prekindergarten through third grade, are being stressed the most (70%) by a wide margin; no other grade grouping had more than 8.3 percent.

When examining various combinations of languages, subjects, and grades to determine if a pattern of materials development existed, a wide range was present. However, the following results were found, again reflecting an emphasis on Asian, early elementary grade levels:

- 37 percent of the materials are both Chinese and prekindergarten through third grade, the largest language-grade combination

THE AREAS OF SHORTAGE IN AVAILABLE MATERIALS

An analysis of the inventory reveals that only four languages -- Spanish, French, Chinese, and Pilipino -- have high or medium* levels of materials. Of these languages, only Spanish has high levels and these are confined to Spanish Language Arts K-6 and Mathematics K-3. Spanish also shows medium levels in Language Arts 6-12, Natural Sciences K-3, and Cultural Materials in all grades. The French materials in Language Arts for grades 10-12 are at the medium level and Chinese shows a similar rating for Language Arts K-6 and Social Studies K-3. The only other language with a medium level is Pilipino with Language Arts K-3 (see also exibit 8).

All other languages in the inventory have a low rating for every subject and grade combination from K-12. In short, it is evident that the four languages cited above present the only positive balance of available materials and these are in limited subject and grade areas.

English as a Second Language materials show a high or medium rating for all grade levels in Language Arts but low rating for other subject grade combinations. However, since Language Arts is the principal subject area of ESL in bilingual programs it would appear that LEA's have an adequate selection of materials available to them.

In summary, only the Spanish language, principally in the K-6 grade levels, shows a satisfactory number of materials from which to choose for classroom use. Despite the medium rating of French, Chinese, and Pilipino materials for some subject and grade combinations, to all intents and purposes these languages are only marginally meeting material needs.

THE SIZE AND NATURE OF THE MARKET FOR BILINGUAL MATERIALS

As has been true with other studies of bilingual education, it has been difficult to quantify the size of the bilingual education market. Many different counts of children abound and the definitions of bilinguality generally determine the size of the population. In this chapter, two approaches to the problem are taken. The first uses various counts of children from appropriate grade levels, including the results of this study's survey of LEA's. This produces a range of market estimates for the various languages. The second approach combines the quantitative data with information gathered through site visits and other sources. This approach is more comprehensive and includes the study recommendations for future actions.

THE SIZE OF THE MARKET BASED ON EXPRESSED NEEDS OF BILINGUAL EDUCATION AND ESL PROJECTS

The LEA survey used in this study contained questions dealing with the numbers of students in Title VII projects who were likely to need materials that are currently unavailable, and the languages, subjects, grades (and types of materials) where these needs occurred. However, these results are not from all Title VII and non-Title VII projects, and represent a 60 percent response of Title VII projects to the sample survey, as well as a 74 percent response to the survey item of interest here. Keeping those factors in mind, the statistics presented represent underestimates or the lower level of actual needs of students in bilingual education and ESL projects. As a basis for comparison, other sources were used to obtain market estimates based on actual counts or projections of students currently being served, those of foreign origin, etc. This approach corresponds to an estimate of the upper level of needs of students of particular language background and limited English-speaking ability. As mentioned earlier, the actual level of needs or market size lies somewhere between these two estimates.

In terms of determining market size, certain other factors need to be kept in mind. The statistics presented in Exhibit 9 are the major amounts of stated needs; however, at times these statistics are based on a very few reporting Title VII projects (such as, one project which reported a need for materials in the Native American language of Pima). Thus, for example, the responses by many Asian language projects were too low to include on this table. Similarly, the particular grade combinations for which materials were needed were not reported, partially because of greater coverage of the topic in the LEA survey volume, and partially because of the wide diversity of grades in which materials are usually needed; to be more specific would make the findings somewhat cumbersome. However, the expressed needs were predominantly in grades kindergarten to eight, and generally focused on the lower grades within that range in all languages.

To highlight the LEA survey statistics of numbers of students needing materials, Spanish language materials needs are by far the largest. Of interest is that Social Studies rather than Language Arts needs are the most needed materials; the tabulation of Inventory listing entries indicated that Language Arts materials were the most represented. This may indicate that there is relatively less need for Language Arts materials, although the need is still sizable. From another point of view, the level of Language Arts needs should not be as high as it is, since the Inventory includes a large proportion of materials in that subject area. Spanish Natural Sciences also represents an area of need since it has not received as much attention as the first two areas mentioned; most of the needs expressed for that subject are in the grade range of kindergarten to sixth grade. The need for Spanish Mathematics materials also may be low because the subject generally is taught in English in bilingual programs.

French and Portuguese are the next most mentioned languages having materials needs; they are both Romance languages as is Spanish, which indicates that this language grouping as a whole has significant materials needs in all subjects.

Several other languages included in Exhibit 9 are uncommon, i.e., Samoan, Pima, Marshalese, and Central Yupik. Few projects utilizing these languages responded; their materials needs generally cover all subjects.

ESL also had large numbers of students needing materials; a large proportion of these students needed supplementary textbooks. This represents an important need for ESL, since currently little is available for bilingual students in the United States; most ESL is aimed at overseas markets.

ESTIMATED MARKETS FOR BILINGUAL MATERIALS FOR MAJOR LANGUAGES

The actual market for each language and grade level lies within the ranges given in Exhibit 9. These numbers, however, do not convey the whole picture of the market for bilingual materials. In order to complete it, it is necessary to analyze the quantitative data in tandem with more descriptive and insightful information gained from site visits throughout the country. Together the information provides a summary of the status of materials in each major language and the study team's projection of the actions needed to assure that useful materials are available. On the next page, we provide summaries on these materials.

The Market for Spanish Instructional Materials

The market for Spanish bilingual instructional materials is by far the largest of the minority language groups. According to the NCES, 60 percent of all language minority persons under age 19 were of Spanish language background. About 90 percent of the Spanish-speaking population is located in Arizona, California, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, New York, Florida, Illinois, and New Jersey. In the five southwestern states, for the most part, the ethnic group is Mexican-American; in the northeast it is primarily Puerto Rican with limited numbers of Hispanics from Latin America. Florida is almost totally Cuban and has the greatest concentration of population in Dade County. Illinois is unique because its Spanish-speaking population is almost equally divided between Mexican-Americans and Puerto Ricans.

In FY 1975-76, the Spanish language Title VII projects were distributed among the states indicated above as shown in Exhibit 8. Clearly, the major market for bilingual materials is in California and Texas followed by New York. However, the state of Illinois has many state bilingual programs in addition to the LEA's funded by Title VII ranking it number four in the Spanish language market. Florida rates fifth and is almost on a level with Illinois.

California	90		38.8
Colorado	10		4.3
New Mexico	11		4.7
Texas	64		27.6

*All projects for the city of Chicago, a densely Hispanic area, were covered in a single grant

There are no Title VII LEA projects in Florida. Bilingual programs are funded by special Cuban Impact Funds (federal) to Dade County.

In summary, the Spanish language offers the only commercially viable market of all the minority language groups. However, it is highly fractionalized both geographically and ethnically This makes it a difficult market for which to produce materials and distribute them and consequently this has been the major deterrent for commercial textbook publishers in entering the market.

The Market for French Instructional Materials

According to the 1970 census, there are two predominantly French speaking regions of the United States. The northeastern states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island comprise the first region which has a total French-speaking population of close to 800,000 people. The state of Louisiana is the second and by far the most populous region, with about 1,500,000 French-speaking citizens. Although each of these Franco-American groups maintains French linguistic and cultural characteristics they are rather different.

According to the National MDC in New Hampshire, the Francophones of New England tend to be conservative and do not want to attract attention to themselves. They have strong family ties and seem to be almost apolitical. It was pointed out that the farther away they move from the Canadian border, the sooner they lose their language. They also seem to be reluctant to support bilingual education, in general, even though they have some Title VII programs in the area.

In Louisiana, where the population is predominantly of Acadian French descent, the situation is different. First, French is an official language of the state. Furthermore, the public and private sectors continuously promote research about Acadian culture throughout Louisiana. Not only do they preserve its artifacts, but also its folklore and philosophy. Finally, through the Council on the Development of French in Louisiana (CODOFIL) the state has established close cultural ties with Belgium, Canada, France, and Switzerland. An ongoing component of CODOFIL enables Louisiana's French teachers to have language training abroad. In a like manner, the cooperating countries send their French teachers to Louisiana. In many ways, Louisiana may be classified as the outstanding proponent of bilingual education in the United States.

There are about 5,300 French-speaking students in 11 Title VII projects in Louisiana. Two projects in Maine, one in Vermont, and two in Massachusetts have a combined enrollment of close to 1,500 students. In the aggregate, there are just short of 7,000 Franco-American students in Title VII programs nationally. Their needs for instructional materials parallel those of all other language programs currently sponsored by the Office of Bilingual Education.

There is not a shortage of educational materials in the French language. The French bibliography of materials is vast and covers every subject and grade from prekindergarten to twelfth. A considerable number of importers and distributors bring in materials, mainly from France and to a lesser extent Canada. As an indication, the largest U.S. distributor of books in French claims to have more than one million titles available on their bookstore and warehouse shelves. However, the problem for bilingual programs in the U.S. lies not with what is available but that it is linguistically too difficult and often culturally irrelevant. As a result, the study team learned from the staffs of the National MDC, Bedford, New Hampshire, and the National Bilingual Resource Center, Lafayette, Louisiana that most of the French bilingual projects develop their own materials and use imports from France and Canada for reference materials. Based on site visits, the study team learned that few materials are produced by U.S. textbook publishers specifically for the U.S. French bilingual market. However, some of the publishers have produced textbooks for the French Canadian market and these may be useful as models or references.

The Market for Haitian Instructional Materials

Although there are concentrations of Haitians in Boston, Miami, and Chicago, the largest Haitian community is in New York and numbers about 200,000 people. Perhaps half of these are in Brooklyn where student enrollment approximates 1,500. There is probably a similar number of Haitian children attending school in the other four boroughs of New York. It is estimated that most of these youngsters have limited English-speaking skills and are scattered from kindergarten to ninth grade. Significantly, there are eight Title VII projects serving Haitian children in New York.

Many Haitian children speak Creole, rather than French. Also, a considerable number have never attended school in their own country. French is the language taught in Haitian schools, but is not often used at home. Their ability to speak, read, and write French is often dependent upon the level of schooling received by the child in Haiti.

At the Lau General Assistance Center (B), Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City, New York, the survey team learned that the instructional materials needs for Haitian children are almost total. Practically speaking, there are none in the U.S. except those developed locally at each school. Even in Haiti, textbooks are difficult to obtain. Clearly, there is no commercial market here for U.S. textbook publishers. Whatever materials are developed for the unique needs of Haitian children will have to have the support of the Office of Bilingual Education.

The Market for Greek Instructional Materials

Since 1965, when the immigration laws were changed, thousands of Greek families have entered the U.S. Most settled primarily in New York City and many estimate that there are about 350,000 Greek-speaking people living there today. Some Greek immigrants went to other cities, notably Chicago, Baltimore, Boston, and Cambridge.* It is probable that Greeks constitute the greatest number of immigrants to come to the U.S. in the last decade.

In their new homeland, the Greek immigrants and their children faced the same obstacles that all other ethnic groups experienced -- immediate adjustment to the new environment and an inability to communicate in the English language. The only institutions that helped in this process were the Greek Orthodox communities. In the main, these were church-school oriented communities of Greek-speaking families. Today, the Greek Orthodox Diocese of North and South America maintains a Hellenic College, 18 elementary-intermediate schools (10 in New York), and more than 400 Greek afternoon schools nationally. These schools teach in Greek and English and were among the forerunners of bilingual education in the U.S.

Apparently, it is the desire of Greek immigrant parents that their children learn English as soon as possible, and in so doing have an equal chance to succeed. But, they also emphasize that in a democracy, they have the right to maintain their Greek language, culture, and religion. What is so unusual about the Greek immigrant's philosophy of bilingual education in America, however, is that of putting the mastery of English as a first priority.

Presently, there are five Title VII programs serving Greek-speaking children. Four of these projects are part of a multilingual grant for the cities of New York, Baltimore, Boston, and Cambridge. The fifth program is in Clearwater (Tarpon Springs), Florida, where there has been a large Greek community for many years. There are 144 students in the Clearwater program. It is more difficult to arrive at a figure for the multilingual projects because only global student counts are available.

To date, no U.S. textbook publishers have produced materials in Greek for U.S. bilingual programs. Not only is the market very thin, but the editorial and production problems (Greek Alphabet) would seem to rule out a publishing effort. Although some materials have been imported by distributors from Greece, and the Greek Ministry of Education has been cooperative in supplying examination copies, these are minimal and apparently serve only as references.

The Market for Italian Instructional Materials

In much the same manner as with other ethnic groups, bilingual educators responsible for Italian curriculum development materials determined that imports from Italy were not suitable. The survey team of Development Associates was informed by the Italian language specialist at the National Bilingual Resource Center, Lafayette, Louisiana that they had conducted some experimentation with Italian textbooks prepared for the children of Italians working in the European Common Market. These were multi-discipline texts and most closely resembled the linguistic content appropriate for Italian students in the U.S. For a variety of reasons, these textbooks were not suitable. Primarily, because they were designed for Italian children who would be returning to Italy when their parents completed a work contract in a Common Market country. Thus, these materials were also often culturally irrelevant and contained many of the same political, religious, and sexual biases as importations from other countries. Nevertheless, they served as the base for a computerized study of vocabulary which was matched against English language word lists. The result was a working vocabulary in Italian useful in the preparation of curriculum development materials.

Despite the large numbers of Italian Americans in the U.S. (an estimated 24 million), there are only 22 Title VII bilingual projects for Italian speaking children. The city of New York has the largest number of projects (12) with the state of New York next with 6. In addition, there are projects serving the school districts of Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, and the Tangipahoa School District of Amite, Louisiana. Because many of these projects embrace more than one language, it was not possible to obtain a reliable count of the Italian speaking students served. The enrollment estimate for the city of New York is placed at 5,000. Based on this figure, the estimated total Italian student count for Title VII appears to be between 8,000 and 10,000.

Since approximately 25,000 Italians enter the U.S. every year, with one quarter of these being children of school age, there is every reason to believe there will be a greater demand for Italian bilingual projects. Notwithstanding, there is little chance that U.S. textbook publishers will develop and produce instructional materials for this ethnic group anymore than they will for French, Portuguese, or Greek. Consequently, OBE must continue to develop suitable Italian bilingual materials in the Network system. This will be a long-range program unless some viable means of working with commercial publishers to produce Italian bilingual materials is developed.

The Market for Portuguese Instructional Materials

During FY 1976-77, there were 14 Title VII projects involving the Portuguese language. There are no hard figures but staff members of the Portuguese language component of the New England TRC, Providence, Rhode Island, estimate there are between 2,500 to 3,000 students in classrooms located in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, California, and to some extent New Jersey. They also consider the number of Portuguese students needing bilingual education nationwide to be about 10,000 to 12,000 with two-thirds of them in northeastern New England and the remainder in California. The biggest concentrations on the east coast are in Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Primarily, these students are immigrants who have come, not from mainland Portugal, but from Madeira, the Azores, and the Cape Verde Islands. As Islanders, in many respects the culture of Portugal is alien to them and their patterns of behavior differ somewhat from those of mainlanders. They speak "Crioulo," an island dialect perceptibly different from standard Portuguese and comparable to the language deviations of French Creole in Haiti or Papiamiento in Curacao and Aruba.

Notwithstanding the fact that Island schools taught them in Portuguese, many of these children have a meager base in the language and some never mastered it at all. Consequently, significant numbers of them arrive in the U.S. having first to learn Portuguese before learning English. Moreover, the textbooks they were taught with dealt mainly with the Portuguese home scene, placing little emphasis on the Islands and other overseas provinces, not the conceptual knowledge of the students and their different styles of life.

The director of the New England TRC, Providence, informed the survey team that the vast majority of the instructional materials currently used in the Title VII programs come from Portugal. Linguistically, these materials offer fewer problems than they do culturally. Nevertheless, one of the most important tasks of the Training Centers working with teachers in Portuguese programs is adapting textbooks from Portugal and Brazil, which includes eliminating teaching units and making deletions, substitutions or additions; in short, adapting the materials to local conditions.

Findings indicate there are about 50 publishers in Portugal and 40 in Brazil who export to the U.S. However, because the teachers and students are mostly Portuguese, Brazilian materials have less appeal for them. Approximately 15 combined distributors and booksellers appear to be importing and servicing the U.S. Portuguese bilingual market.*

*Bibliography of Instructional Materials for the Teaching of Portuguese 1976. California State Department of Education.

In summary, owing to the relatively small market offered U.S. publishers by the Portuguese language programs there will be a continued need for OBE to maintain and strengthen the current Network program for the development and publication of Portuguese materials.

The Market for Instructional Materials for Asian Languages

From the standpoint of American linguists and educators, Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Pilipino, and Vietnamese are classified as "uncommonly taught" languages. Nonetheless, publishers in the U.S. have produced some language study courses, grammars, readers, dictionaries, and other allied reference works in Chinese and Japanese for adult students. Output in the other languages cited above has been negligible. Virtually nothing suitable for Asian children of classroom age has been produced by commercial publishers. Until Title VII Asian-American MDC's began developing elementary grade bilingual materials in 1975, and secondary textbooks in 1976, there were very few culturally relevant materials. The exceptions were some isolated texts and series developed for local use by school districts or schools in California, Hawaii, New York, and Illinois.

As with other ethnic groups in the U.S., the settlement patterns of Asians favor specific states and cities. Primarily, Orientals have concentrated on the west, particularly in the states of Hawaii, California, and Washington. Chinese, Japanese, and Filipinos* constitute about half of Hawaii's population and number approximately 363,000. In California, these same ethnic groups make up about two percent of the state's population and total just over 500,000. A number of Asians, Chinese in particular, are in the northeast. Close to 82,000 Chinese, 20,000 Japanese, and 14,000 Filipinos are in the state of New York. Illinois accounts for most of the Orientals in the north central region where they number nearly 44,000. Koreans follow the same distribution patterns as those for the larger Asian groups. The biggest concentration (44 percent) is in the Pacific region with the remainder rather unevenly distributed over the rest of the country. According to the latest immigration figures, there are about 169,000 Vietnamese currently in the U.S. More than 25 percent of them are in California with appreciable numbers in Louisiana, Texas, Maryland, Virginia, the District of Columbia, and New York.

The Asian Bilingual MDC, South Orange, New Jersey, informed the study team that unlike European immigrants who come to the U.S. with some semblance of linguistic and cultural background for life in the U.S., Asians face a different situation. Their languages and cultures are totally alien to those of this country. Furthermore, in no other area do these differences become more evident than in the preparation of instructional materials for Asian children in U.S. classrooms. Notably, language and language varieties are many.

*Minorities in the Labor Market - Volume II, 1976, U.S. Department of Commerce.

For example, the Chinese rely on Mandarin for the written language but speak innumerable dialects. Cantonese, among the most widely spoken, is itself divided into sub-dialects. Although the Japanese of Tokyo predominates, there are many other dialects, such as that of Hiroshima, which are spoken by a large segment of the population. The Vietnamese from Hanoi, Hue, and Saigon all speak different versions of their language. Korean may be the least affected by dialects, but there are north-south differences. Pilipino poses an unusual linguistic problem. It is a new national language characterized by the fusion of different Pilipino languages, principal of which are Tagalog and Ilocano.

The cultures and cultural varieties are equally numerous for each Asian ethnic group. Primarily these concern geographic, ideological, societal, and movement (independence, ethnic, etc.) conditions. And there are many other considerations such as assimilation and acculturation, ethnocentrism, main culture-subculture, etc. All of these linguistic and cultural values must be considered when developing bilingual curriculum materials for Asian children.

The study findings show it is extremely difficult to locate people in the U.S. who can write the native Asian languages, are functionally native in English, know curriculum content, and have teaching experience. Furthermore, the backgrounds and status of Asian children vary considerably both with regard to their needs and the needs expressed by local communities. In most cases bilingual projects are concerned with incorporation into the American education system; however, in some cases, especially with respect to many Japanese children, instruction focuses on maintenance since they are sojourners who will return to their homeland. Furthermore, the learning styles of Asian students from Manila, Hong Kong, Saigon, Seoul, or Tokyo differ in terms of their educational background. In addition, the orientation of their previous education and their levels of achievement are markedly different, which in turn, call for varying starting points in grade levels.

Unlike the extensive bibliographic data in the U.S. on K-12 instructional materials in European languages such as Spanish or French, Asian language library holdings and specialized collections are not readily available for Asian materials. Furthermore, what can be obtained directly from Asia involves inordinate delays and very high costs. Moreover, such materials require studious adaptation before approximating anything like usefulness for U.S. programs.

Typesetting, proofing, printing, and even binding are matters of special consideration for Asian materials. In regard to the printing and binding, it is essential to have native specialists at Dissemination and Assessment Centers to supervise the work. If not, there are problems, such as the case where portions of the finished material were bound upside down and shipped out unnoticed. Some Oriental languages have their own ideograph alphabets. Others, like Pilipino and Vietnamese, have a modified version of the Roman alphabet using additional diacritical marks and accents. Whatever the case, there must be language specialists at both the editorial and printer levels. In addition, to capture graphically the cultural nuances, Asian illustrators are required.

In summary, the creation, production, and eventual distribution of Asian language materials for bilingual programs require such highly specialized treatment, there is little likelihood they will ever receive attention by commercial publishers. Thus, it would seem that OBE will have to make considerable funding investment in Asian language MDC's for long periods of time in order to meet the needs of their target populations.

The Market for Instructional Materials for Native American Languages

The 1970 census showed the American Indian population to be about 750,000 people, somewhere in the range of one half percent of the nation's total population. Seemingly, there was an appreciable growth (50 percent) of the American Indian population between 1960-1970.* However, these figures should be viewed with caution because some of the increase may be attributable to the more accurate enumeration of 1970.

As in the case of Hispanic groups in the U.S., it is inappropriate to treat Native Americans as an homogeneous population. For example, the U.S. Census Bureau classifies more than 80 major tribal categories. The Navajo is the largest with about 97,000 members and accounts for about 13 percent of the total American Indian population. Other tribes with significant numbers are the Cherokee (66,000) and the Sioux (48,000), but there are also many tribes with less than a thousand in number. Moreover, there are numerous tribal subdivisions.

*Minorities in Labor Market - Volume I, 1975 - U.S. Department of Commerce.

In FY 1976-77 there were 32 Native American bilingual programs operating in 12 different states serving a total student population of just over 14,000. Most projects were located in Arizona (9), New Mexico (9), and Alaska (7). The Navajo had the largest overall enrollment (5,000), followed by the Cherokee (1,500), and the Choctaw (1,000). Of the remaining 24 linguistic groups, Alaska accounts for six which served just over 1,000 children.

At the Native American Materials Development Center, Albuquerque, New Mexico, the director and staff informed the study team that although many Native American languages have alphabets or orthographies, a majority still lack any accepted method of writing. Because of this, the spoken language has been the principal medium of language, knowledge, and cultural transfer. The Navajo are generally conceded to have the most advanced state of native language knowledge and cultural transfer. Nevertheless, their problems related to the need for, and preparation of instructional materials are many. For example, a recent national assessment of needs for instructional materials conducted by Navajo educators called for:

- an integrated and comprehensive language arts (core curriculum K-12) with emphasis on reading;
- a social studies curriculum, geography materials, and practical culture books;
- mathematics materials containing Navajo relevant problems; and
- a variety of teacher oriented materials.

Aside from the demands of curriculum, there is another major factor in the development of instructional materials for Native American programs -- the disproportionately high cost of preparation and production. While development costs are high for all uncommonly taught languages (Chinese, Korean, etc.), they are significantly higher for Native American languages for these reasons:

- more local development work must be done because there is often little or no bibliography of commercially produced materials on which to draw;
- salaries of linguists, tribal elders, and other professionals add to the cost of developing the written system;
- various tribal experts must be paid for their time in providing culturally relevant information for the development of orthography and materials; and

- many projects are located on isolated reservations or in remote villages causing additional travel costs in creating, producing, and distributing materials to be considerably higher.

Furthermore, within language groups there are very few Native Americans whose literacy in the language is sufficient for them to undertake such tasks as: scriptwriting; editing; proofreading; transcribing; illustrating; or supervising any of these tasks. Not only do Native Americans have a difficult time assembling a qualified production staff, an inordinate amount of time has to be spent in on-the-job media skills training. This situation, of itself, causes an increase both in time and cost for all curriculum development activities.

For the preceding materials development difficulties and the many small markets, it would seem that the production of bilingual instructional materials for Native Americans can only be accomplished through federal financial support. The OBE can do this under the existing Title VII program, in collaboration with other federal programs for Native Americans, or possibly through some form of subsidy arrangement with University Presses specializing in Native American studies. Regardless of the form of underwriting, however, it will be a costly long-term process covering minimal periods of financial support and technical assistance of from five to ten years depending on the stage of development of the language involved.

In summary, the study results show that commercial publishing of materials is a possibility for Spanish materials only. Even here there appears to be a distinction between the elementary level and the high school level. This situation, however, is complicated by the different linguistic and cultural backgrounds of the Spanish speakers. At a very minimum, there are four distinct groups in the U.S.: Chicano, Cuban, Puerto Rican, and Latino (Central and South America). The differences between these groups are real and serve to fragment the potential market. Publishers are aware of this situation and this partially accounts for their reluctance to enter the market with a serious commitment. It does, however, appear that the Spanish market at the elementary level is viable. On the other hand, the commercial market for all other languages is so small or complicated that either OBE or local projects will have to continue to develop the needed materials.

THE INVENTORY OF BILINGUAL INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS

The final form of the Inventory consists of 2,738 double-spaced entries which span 317 pages of computer-generated listings; a table of contents is present. A summary statistic, the number of entries, appears at the end of each set of entries for the primary classification factor, language. Each language begins on a new page of the Inventory. Within each language, the top of each numbered page indicates the headings of language, subject, grade level, material, publisher and title. The sequence of entries exactly follows the category sequence of Exhibit 1, except where no entries were found for a particular language-subject-grade material combination.

Each subject is separated by a dotted line for the sake of readability. Each entry is represented by three lines, the first line listing the four prime descriptors, the second line the publisher, and the third line the title of the Inventory entry. An Inventory Table of Contents is included.
